MISCELLANEOUS READING. A REMARKABLE CAREER.

The New Orleans papers record the death of Captain Joseph St. Ange Bossiere, a native of Baltimore, from wounds received in a recent affray in that city, with J. M Vernon. Few men have ever passed through as many perils-have suffered as many wounds and have led such an adventurous life as the deceased. The Delta after stating that he died at the age of 55 years, says: He was badly wounded at the battle of Navarino, in 1828, where he commanded a vessel in the Egyptian service, and when his ship had been blown up by one of superior force of the British squadron, he was found omong the other wounded in the cock-pit and made himself known to the British of ficer, who, by a strange coincidence, proved to be our late fellow-citizen, John Gedge, esq. Great was his astonishment to find, dres-sed in the uniform of the Egyptian, a young man who spoke English so glibly. On in-quiry he found he was a Baltimore boy, who, in a spirit of adventure, had accepted a commission in the Egyptian navy, and had the misfortune to be attached to the Turkish squadron in the perfidious slaughter at Nava rion, where England and France played so useful a part for the benefit of Russia. Young Bossiere was held as a prisoner for some time by the British, and well treated On his return to this country he embarked in some naval enterprises in the gulf, was enhis ship was again blown up, and he badly wounded. At a later period he was yacht ing in the gulf one day, and hailed a ship and boarded her to obtain supplies. There being rumors of pirates at the time, the captain's yacht was mistaken for a pirate vessel take the crew of the ship assaulted him as soon as he stepped on board, and beat him down with marling-spikes, billets of wood and other missiles, breaking several of his bones, and leaving him senseless and bleed ing on the deck. For this mistake the captain afterwards instituted suit in the United States courts and recovered all the damages he claimed. After that the Captain quit the sea, and has since led a quiet and comfortable country life at his residence in the par ish of St. Tammany.

Capt. Bossiere was the same gentleman whom Fanny Kemble in her book on this country, describes in such glowing and high ly wrought colors as a model American pirate-a title to which the captain had no just claim, although the imaginative actress evidently regarded it as one of honor and distinction.
